SYNOPSIS

Althea Sherrill, beautiful daughter of the wild Canadian Northland, seeks to thwart enemies in a mysterious trouble that hangs over her - but finds the task too much for her womanly strength. At an opportune moment she meets Tom Merwin, Government agent who falls madly in love with her. And despite her fear that in all the world she couldn't find a man big enough to help as she needs help, Merwin proves to be such a man, and - though amazed at her proposition that he pose as her husband for a time, he agrees. At her home, she shows him a baby, she claims it as her own - just before her parents arrive, after a trip to Montreal. Tom, unshaken in his trust, knowing this beautiful girl could not have been at fault, persists in his help. Althea reveals that the man who wronged her, Sam Bellows, has followed from Montreal, and threatens to expose her to her parents unless she pays his price. His price is herself. Althea refuses. Merwin wants to sail into Bellows, but Althea explains that Bellows has prepared two copies of conclusive evidence - and even if Bellows is killed, one copy entrusted to able agents, will surely get to Sherrill, Althea's father. Bellows captures and carries Althea to his rendezvous, leaving Merwin for dead. But Merwin revives, summons help, and the Bellows' rendezvous, Batielle's, is stormed by Althea's friends, to whom she has always been known as "L'Ange of the Forests". And her father, learning of the matter, joins in the assault, and it is the part of Merwin and Althea to keep him from seeing Bellows during the battle. Batielle's falls before the assaulting party, and Bellows and his men, trying to escape with Althea, are caught by Merwin. Althea's faithful dogs arrive in time to turn the odds in Merwin's favor. Bellows is killed. Both copies of the papers, which prove to ~~Batielle's~~ Merwin that Althea's mother, and not Althea, is the mother of the illegitimate baby are destroyed. Sherrill never learns any hint of the mother. Althea's sacrifice is known only to Merwin and to the Mother - and after all that has happened, Althea does not insist upon fulfillment of the whole bargain -- that Merwin go away. Instead of being man and wife only to the world, they now become so to one another.
